

CALL for PAPERS

Transnational Asia: an online interdisciplinary journal

Transnational Asia: an online interdisciplinary journal is a new web-only journal from the Chao Center for Asian Studies, Rice University. Transnational Asia publishes scholarship that challenges traditional understandings of Asia, moving beyond the confines of area studies and a nation-state focus, and capturing the emergent forms of Asia-related, Asia-inspired, and Asia-driven themes and sites of inquiry in the world today.

The historical process by which people, goods, ideas, and cultural artifacts have traveled both within Asia and beyond has accelerated exponentially in the era of modern communications and global capitalism, so that the “Asian” and the “global” are mutually implicated—this to the extent that the traditional boundaries between Asian Studies and Asian American Studies are now somewhat artificial. We do not, of course, deny the reality of nation-states: they do exist, and disputes over and about them involve concerns over sovereignty and nationalism that often result in immense human suffering and environmental disasters. This is part of the story of modern Asia, however defined and understood (or misunderstood). But our concerns transcend borders, and our goal is to work around and against, and yet at the same time critically engage, issues related to national boundaries and policies.

Finally, Transnational Asia is a multidisciplinary enterprise, encouraging scholars in broad humanistic and social scientific disciplines to submit their work of between 5,000 to 8,000 words. Historical and contemporary articles and essays are both welcome, as are visual and audio-visual materials. An abstract of about 250 words summarizing the author’s work should also be included. All main articles will be peer-reviewed. Transnational Asia does not accept for publication articles that have already been published elsewhere. If an author wishes to submit a previously published article that has been substantially revised, the author must first contact the editorial office for discussion.

Submission deadline: April 15, 2017.

For inquiries and submissions, contact: transnational.asia@rice.edu.

To view the inaugural issue of Transnational Asia, go to: <https://transnationalasia.rice.edu/>